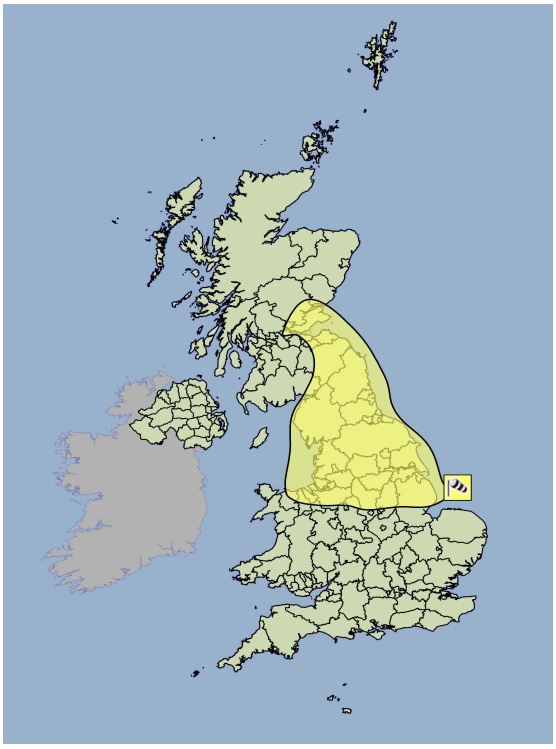
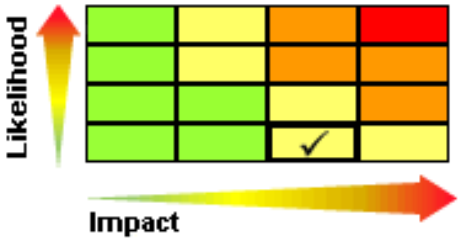
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deepening depression will move northeastwards into the North Sea on Sunday night and into Monday with very strong winds on its southwestern flank. There is some uncertainty over the strength of the gusts at low levels, especially to the east of the Pennines where there is a low risk of these being very strong, but there is high confidence that hazardous conditions are likely over the high ground of the Pennines.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 18:00 on Sun, 10th Aug 2014 until 09:00 on Mon, 11th Aug 2014

Westerly winds are expected to pick up on Sunday evening across North Wales, Liverpool Bay and northwest England, then also across the Pennines and northeast England before extending to southeast Scotland overnight.

Gusts of 40-50 mph are likely quite widely, perhaps in excess of 60 mph - this most likely across the Pennines where isolated gusts as high as 70 mph are possible.

Winds will tend to moderate from the southwest of the yellow area overnight but will remain strong across northeast England and southeastern Scotland into Monday morning.

The public should be aware of the potential for some disruption due to the unseasonably strong winds, with some difficult driving conditions likely.
